

Managing Cookies

What are cookies?

When you visit a website, your computer stores pieces of text known as “cookies”.

Cookies cannot be used to deliver viruses or be executed as code. They are simple files, not programs.

You can think of cookies as an ID card your computer shows to the websites you visit. Cookies are used for many different functions such as identifying which browser you are using, verifying your identity, and telling sites how to tailor their content to you.

Our policy

At Tradefair Financials, we respect the privacy of our customers and provide the necessary information for managing your cookies.

Tradefair Financials' site uses three categories of cookie:

- Marketing: These cookies use your activity on Tradefair Financials to make online content and advertising more relevant to your interests.
- Essential: Essential cookies are used for our online trading platform and your profile. You will not be able to sign in or use our platform if they are disabled.
- Analytical: This type of cookie helps us give you a better overall experience by learning how you use our site.

You can change how to accept cookies in your browser settings. To manage your mobile phone's cookies, refer to your phone manual.

If you need further assistance managing your cookie settings or have additional questions, aboutcookies.org is a great source.

Please read our Privacy Policy for more information on how Tradefair Financials uses your cookies and other forms of data.
